Personal Statement

Throughout my life, my personal talent has been building things from scratch. This talent is what makes me standout from most of my peers. This talent is important to me because it makes me who I am today and also shapes my future career goal of becoming an engineer. Having such a talent makes me feel unique and useful because in the future I will be able not only to do what I do now, but also impact a larger group of people.

I want to create inventions or improvements in technology that will make peoples everyday lives easier. When I wasn't focusing on academics, I was paying attention to my dad. He is what you would call an aero modeler, doing it at a hobby level. I remember watching him sit down at the dinner table with a sketchbook and a pencil and just jotting down what he had in his mind onto paper. He enjoyed having discussions with me and taking my ideas into consideration before making a 3D object (motor, wings, structures, etc.) using complex machinery. This drives me to invent, improve and just simply understand how things work. This inspired me to become someone who is eager to learn more in order to be able to succeed in changing someone's world.

Most teenagers have game systems to escape reality, others read books; what I have is a workshop in my house. Sitting down and thinking of how to design or build an object is what I enjoy doing. In the beginning my workshop started off with just tables and boxes of tools scattered around. Designing was done with paper and pencil, but now it is done on a computer. I can make wooden masterpieces with the Laser CO₂ machine now that I have one or I can make parts for a competition robot using a CNC router. With each machine added, I gain more knowledge towards construction and technology.

I have been helping friends and family by fixing problematic electronics that needed fixing hoping to do it on a larger scale in the future. I feel proud that I am able to follow my ultimate goal of making peoples lives easier. Furthermore, it is my desire to major in Mechanical Engineering since my dreams and aspirations shaped by my family with aeromodeling, created a rigorous path to follow my life long goal.
