expensive sanction fees technology reduces costs, maybe reduces personal involvement diminishing sponsorship finance not enough countries want to organise events air space restrictions “virtual tasks”

are uninteresting to spectators hard to organise events increased cost of sport aging community, not recruiting new young pilots not maintaining the quality of events Sustainability of the sport competition from other outdoor and aviation activities isolated thinking of the commissions lack of communication between commissions and FAI head-office Ensuring long-term execution of projects lack of growth, complacency Regulatory authorities more technical aspects, less audience understanding maintaining good relations with local communities and land-owners balance between technology and tradition

Lack of funding
not changing
